Muslim Jats in Pakistan

Jat people have a history of being warriors. Their lifestyle was designed to foster a martial spirit. Whenever they lost their kingdoms, Jat people retired to the countryside and became landowners and the landlords with their swords girded round their waists. They would draw the sword out of the scabbard at the command of their panchayat (village leader) to fight off any invader.

Ministry Obstacles

Muslim Jats are fiercely independent and highly value their self-respect. Although these qualities are highly admired in most societies, they do not rate highly in God's eyes. Jesus came to be a humble servant to others. He taught his followers to esteem others more highly than themselves and to turn the other cheek – all of which flies in the face of human pride.

Outreach Ideas

Someone with the right skills could interview Muslim Jats as a historian as a way of having social contact with these fascinating people.
